

Orangeville's Indigenous Crosswalk

▲ In time for Sept. 30, the first National Day for Truth and Reconciliation, the Town of Orangeville painted an orange crosswalk with seven feathers across it, to commemorate Indigenous children who were forced into residential schools. The seven feathers represent Seven Grandfathers' teachings, which are wisdom, love, respect, bravery, honesty, humility and truth.

Art for Orangeville

◀ Victorian Lady, a tree sculpture by chainsaw artist Robbin Wenzoski, has been installed at 255 Broadway in Orangeville. Robbin created two other tree sculptures for the town, as part of its public art program.

The Lost Children

Photographs by Mike Davis

On Manitoulin Island in August, these were some of the expressions of emotion regarding the unmarked graves of residential school children.

On Sept. 30, the Walk of Remembrance Guided by Grandmothers' Voice in honour of the children and survivors of the Indian residential school systems, took place at the Urban Indigenous Center for HOPE and Peace for Wellness, at Country Heritage Park, Milton.

Flamborough Flood Protection

On Aug. 12, councillor Judi Partridge and representatives from Conservation Halton, City of Hamilton and Greenbelt Foundation broke ground for the second phase of the Flamborough Centre Park, which will restore a little-used sports park to wetland. Photo provided by Conservation Halton.
